Vive la Difference

GADELOUPE

MARTINIQUE

BOTH Martinique and Guadeloupe offer all the advantages of a Caribbean vacation, with a French accent, and you'll find them a balmy substitute for a trip to the Old World, minus the high tariff of the latter, and plus free port bargains in such fabulous items as the finest French perfumes (including the great names like Guerlain, Caron, Patou, Molyneux, etc.), Kislav gloves, Swiss watches, Limoges china, Baccarat crystal, Christofle silver and the wonderful records of the beguine, which began in Martinique.

Beaches, scenery and climate are as perfect as anywhere in the Caribbean. The new hotels are particularly elegant and the cooking, including a restaurant with a chef from Maxim's (Guadeloupe's L'Oiseau des Iles at the airport), is probably the finest in the West Indies. The French do know how to use local produce to the best advantage. Eating on either island is a leisurely affair and lunch or dinner will probably include five courses. Begin the meal the Martinique way, with a 20¢ rum punch, and don't forget to sample some of those excellent French wines and champagnes on the menu. Local fruits are delicious.

Three hundred miles south of Puerto Rico, GADELOUPE is a butterfly-shaped island that is actually two—flat and fertile Grande Terre, and the misnamed mountainous Basse Terre. They are joined by a bridge over a narrow passage called Riviere Salee.

Discovered by Columbus on November 4, 1493, the island was named GADELOUPE by him in compliment to the monks of the monastery of Guadeloupe in Estremadura, Spain in fulfillment of a vow made to that religious body before starting on his expedition. It remained a Spanish possession until abandoned by the Spaniards in 1604 when it was occupied by the French in 1635. In 1759 began the first of the battles between the French and the English which continued until Guadeloupe was once more restored to France by the peace of 1815 following the defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo.

The French

Guadeloupe is easy to fall in love with. The east wing, Grande Terre, is the side for languid, lovely beaches, along the south and east coasts at Gosier Ste. Anne, St. Francois, and Moule. The main city is Pointe-a-Pitre, its fifty thousand population four times that of Basse-Terre, the island's capital in the west. The big hotel in Pointe-a-Pitre, (50 rooms) is the Grand, a rococo Victorian place where everybody meets everyone else. There is also the smaller Normandie. On the island's Basse-Terre side is the new FORT ROYAL, where the fresh-water pool vies for popularity with two magnificent white-sand beaches. Twenty-five private bungalow chateaux snuggle along the silver sand, and savory fare is lavishly offered with savoir faire (Robert F. Warner, JU 6-4500). At Gourbeyre's HOTEL DOLE-LES-BAINS you can recuperate from whatever ails you in the spa's warm, mineral baths. Its genial owner, Guy Lacascade, speaks English fluently, and is also the owner of the plush airport restaurant previously mentioned. Guadeloupe's other new venture is the 100-room ocean-front LA CARAVELLE (Utell International, PL 7-2981). A luxury hotel featuring air conditioning, swimming pool, cocktail lounge, nightly dancing and entertainment, is located on what is probably the island's most stunning beach.

Art doesn't thrive in Guadeloupe as it does in Martinique but there are several galleries in Pointe-a-Pitre. The winner of the Nobel Prize for Poetry in 1960, St. John Perse (Alexis Leger), now residing in Washington, D. C., was born in Guadeloupe in 1887.

MARTINIQUE, discovered by Columbus on June 15, 1502, was called "Madinina" (Island of Flowers) by its original inhabitants, the Carib Indians, and this has remained its poetic name ever since. The Creole island became rich on the slave-worked sugar plantations, so rich and brilliant that St. Pierre, its former capital, was called the "Little Paris of the Caribbean." The streets of Fort-de-France are completely French in feeling and the universal liveliness of Creole conversation, the alert friendliness of the people is delightful. The iron-built Cathedral is tall, gothic and cool, and there is the strangely oriental dome of the Bibliotheque Schoelcher which houses a library left by the man responsible for the emancipation of the slaves in French territories. This, too, is built of iron, its prefabricated sectional parts were exhibited at the Paris Exhibition of 1918, before being shipped out and reassembled in Martinique. Gauguin was here before dashing off to Tahiti, and Martinique has some outstanding artists today, many of whom were trained in Paris. At Rue Schoelcher No. 32 you'll find a small, modern gallery with a display of their work, paintings, textiles, sculpture.

The first-class hotels in Martinique are small but delightful. The newest and largest is the air-conditioned 30-room HOTEL CAP EST, 15 miles from the airport, on its own charming beach, an attractive swimming pool, superlative French cuisine and wines, music, water sports (RR Hotel Representatives, PL 7-4666). On the way to St. Pierre is the LIDO, one of the best, particularly food-wise. Perched on a hill it overlooks a magnificent sweep of Martinique's beaches and blue Caribbean waters (Harrington-Krims, JU 2-7489). One of the nicest inns is L'AUBERGE De L'ANSE MITAN, across the bay at Trois Ilets. The food is good, it's on the beach, and there's frequent boat service to Fort-de-France (Kermit & Morrow, OX 7-7570). Two of the best restaurants are Chez Etienne on the Rue Victor Hugo and just a half mile out of town, L'Auberge du Manoir.

PLACE DE L'EGLISE, POINTE-A-PITRE,
GUADELOUPE

Our own Lafcadio Hearn was one of the first Americans to discover Martinique, around 1890, and after living there he put it all down in a fascinating book, "Two Years in the French West Indies."

Martinique possesses several thermal springs in the neighborhood of Fort-de-France—Didier, Absalon and Mouette. That at Didier is an excellent table water. Absalon's is good for rheumatism.

The favorite excursion in Martinique is to St. Pierre on the west coast north of Fort-de-France. Monte Pellee, the famous but now silent volcano, dominates the horizon. It last erupted in 1902, after several days of preliminary rumbling which the inhabitants unwisely ignored. Today luxurious tropical creepers conceal the ruins of an opera house, an early cathedral and the other buildings, silent witnesses to the vanished life of a famous town of wit and civilization, snuffed out in less than one minute! An interesting museum displays relics of the eruption. The road back to Fort-de-France runs through some of the highest and most picturesque scenery in the island. Don't miss the church at Balata, which is a small reproduction of the famed Sacre Coeur de Montmartre in Paris.

The French West Indies most glamorous figure was Josephine Tacher de la Pagerie, who became Empress of the French by her marriage to Napoleon I, born at Martinique June 24, 1763. The visitor can still see the frame house at La Pagerie where she lived, the church where she worshipped, and a little museum at Trois Ilets with mementoes of her days of glory. A statue of the Empress stands in the main square of Fort-de-France.

Equally as glamorous but almost totally unknown today was Josephine's cousin, Aimee Dubucq de Rivery, who by a set of romantic circumstances, became the mother of the Turkish sultan, Mahmoud II. Carried off by Barbary pirates while on a voyage and placed in the harem of the reigning Sultan, she was not long in attracting his attention by reason of her education and her Creole air of distinction, and she became his favorite wife. She is buried in a magnificent tomb built for her by Mahmoud II, Sultan of Turkey, in the gardens of the mosque of Mehmed Fatih that dominates Constantinople.

FIND FOR ESCAPISTS . . .

ST. BARTHELEMY—A hundred miles north of Guadeloupe is St. Barthelemy, usually referred to as St. Barts. One of the real beauties of the Caribbean, totally unspoiled, and completely off the beaten track, it has a three-mile crescent protectively enclosed by high hills on one side and an off-shore reef on the other that is unmatched, even in the Caribbean. The principal village, Gustavia, was named after a Swedish king, for St. Barts was once occupied by the Swedes. French wines, liqueurs, and perfumes can be bought here at prices lower than in France, for this is a French island (a dependency of Guadeloupe), and a free port. There is a nineteenth-century feeling about the place, confirmed by the women with their old-fashioned sun bonnets. Both men and women are often handsome—tall, blue-eyed, blonde, and self-possessed. The present population of 2,200 is almost all descended from the fourteen original Brittany families who settled the island in 1650.

Two of the island's leading citizens are Remy de Haenen and Alexander Magras, both of whom are former governors of this island paradise. Mr. Magras, the proprietor of several Gustavia stores, also owns the guest house, AUTOUR DU ROCHER. Mr. de Haenen runs the island's newest inn, EDEN ROCK, on the beautiful beach crescent mentioned above. Mr. de Haenen flies his own plane and if you plan to stay at his hotel he may fly over and pick you up in St. Martin, Puerto Rico, St. Croix, or Guadeloupe.

The island's other two beautiful beaches are owned by David Rockefeller, and the latter has built a quarter million dollar house on the low cliff just above one of them for his two-week retreat spent here every year. St. Barts is still a quiet, undisturbed backwater of French civilization, and those few Americans who have discovered it probably fervently hope that it will remain so.

AROUND THE ISLANDS . . .

The Trinidad & Tobago Tourist Board has been using steelbands to capture the imagination of teenagers. Steelband now spells "Trinidad" for youngsters who have been learning to play the "pans" in community centers such as New York's Educational Alliance. Shown here are (above) SIR ELLIS CLARKE, Ambassador of Trinidad & Tobago to the United States and the United Nations; Andrew Narell, winner of a teenage steelband competition; and Leonard Hanken, Vice President of The Educational Alliance, New York City. The lucky youngster received a week in Trinidad, awarded by the Trinidad & Tobago Tourist Board in cooperation with the British West Indian Airways. These agencies have been supporting community centers with drums, publicity and travel incentives.

WALTER MARLOWE, Washington architect, has purchased Hans Lollik Island, 1½ miles off St. Thomas, for development as a resort center. He plans a large hotel on the 1,400-foot main beach, 120 cottages and a "town" of small houses and shops. No autos will be permitted on the 500-acre island. Battery-powered golf carts, donkey-drawn carriages and bicycles will provide transportation. The island is linked to St. Thomas via a 15-minute motor-boat ride.

CDA DOMINICANA AIRLINES has opened a Miami office in the Everglades Hotel, 224 Biscayne Blvd. The airline flies from Miami Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Sundays via DC-6Bs for Santo Domingo, San Juan, Curacao and Caracas. The line has served Miami ten years.

PAN AMERICAN on April 26 inaugurates jet service from New York to Aruba. Initially, flights will leave Kennedy International Airport once a week to Aruba via San Juan and Curacao, with Panama as terminal; twice a week via Santo Domingo with Curacao the final stop. Aruba opens its jet airport in early April.

Visitors to JAMAICA can improve their tennis game under the tutelage of two all-time "greats" of international tennis. Don Budge is resident tennis pro at the Montego Bay Racquet Club. Fred Perry, who turned to golf at the height of his tennis career, is resident professional (and manager) of Runaway Bay Golf Club, Ocho Rios. During the winter he headquarters at the Trelawny Club, where he teaches golf and tennis, supervising the club's sports activities.

ALCOA STEAMSHIP COMPANY now offers passenger accommodations on their air-conditioned ore-carriers from Point Comfort (near Corpus Christi), Texas to Jamaica. The M. V. PATHFINDER and the M. V. PROSPECTOR with up to 12 passengers departs from Texas about every two weeks for the five-day run to Jamaica. Either direction the one-way fare per person is $140.

Frederiksted, U. S. V. I., has another new gift shop. PORTS O CALL bills itself as a shop featuring "unusual things from interesting places"—and it's true. Persian antiques vie with Hong Kong pewter and Tibetan quartz necklaces for your attention. Free port prices make the many exotic gifts even more enticing.

For leisurely cruises to ST. JOHN and its incomparable beaches, take the 52-foot catamaran HO-TEI, under the capable captaincy of Elmer Bouchelle. Tariff is a mere $12.50 for the day's sail. For those romantically inclined, this fast catamaran sails from the waterfront every month during the full moon from 9 p.m. until midnite at $5.00 per person!

CARIBBEAN CRUISE LINES offers the magnificent Italian-inspired, Italian-manned luxurious M/S RIVIERA and a variety of Spring cruises designed to suit every budget and time schedule. All from the sunshine port of Fort Lauderdale, Florida. Continental cuisine, 2 orchestras for dancing every night, midnight buffet, 2 outdoor swimming pools, Solarium Deck, shipboard activity program. Sailings: March 2, 10, 13, 20, 27 and April 3, 8.

Coming up is the important 13th Annual General Meeting of the CARIBBEAN TOURIST ASSOCIATION to be held in Guadeloupe, this May 10-14, 1964, at the kind invitation of the Secretariat General of Guadeloupe.
